Re:    *United States v. Ethan Melzer, S1 20 Cr. 314 (GHW)

Dear Mr. Adelsberg, Mr. Hellman, and Ms. Ravener:

We write to notify you, pursuant to Rule 16(b)(1)(C) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, that the defense intends to call Dr. David Greenfield as an expert witness at trial. The defense reserves the right to call additional expert witnesses and will promptly notify the government if it elects to do so.

Dr. Greenfield's curriculum vitae is attached to this letter as Exhibit A. He is a clinical psychologist with expertise in compulsive and addictive Internet use and behavior. He holds a Ph.D. in counseling psychology, a masters of science in clinical psychopharmacology, a masters of arts in counseling, and a bachelor's degree in psychology. He is the founder and medical director of the Center for Internet and Technology Addiction, a treatment, research, and educational center for compulsive use of the Internet, video games, and smart phone technology. Dr. Greenfield has held numerous teaching positions, most recently as an assistant clinical professor in the Department of Psychiatry at the University of Connecticut School of Medicine from 2000 to 2020. Dr. Greenfield has published extensively in peer-reviewed journals, as well as two books, on the topic of Internet and technology use and abuse, the etiological and neurobiological characteristics of compulsive Internet use, and the psychological characteristics of compulsive Internet use.

At trial, Dr. Greenfield will testify about the causes and characteristics of compulsive Internet use—use of the Internet, social media, video games, and related technologies that is repetitive and quasi-involuntary, continued by users despite the negative consequences that stem from such behavior. These negative consequences may include the expenditure of an inordinate amount of time, the opportunity cost of other uses of time and energy, the clouding of a user’s judgment, and the loss of one’s ability to discern fantasy from reality.

Dr. Greenfield will testify that it is often difficult to separate reality from fantasy on the Internet. He will share a finding from his own research, including a survey of 18,000 Internet users, that approximately fifty percent of users admit to lying or misrepresenting facts online with regularity. As a result, Dr. Greenfield will testify, the Internet is a forum where it can be difficult or impossible to discern what is true or real from what is false, fictitious, or fanciful.

Based on his research, Dr. Greenfield will similarly testify that the Internet’s “perceived anonymity” causes users to experience “disinhibition,” and that Internet users often assume that their online speech has no real-world consequences. In online chat or community spaces, this “disinhibition” effect is enhanced by a phenomenon that Dr. Greenfield describes as “accelerated intimacy.” Heavy Internet users in online conversation mistakenly come to view total strangers with whom they chat as familiar. This erroneous perception of familiarity prompts even greater feelings of disinhibition, making users even more likely to engage in fantastical or role-playing behaviors and discussions.

Dr. Greenfield will also explain to the jury the basic neurobiological mechanisms that make heavy Internet use addictive. The human brain, like all mammalian brains, contains pathways and systems developed over millions of years to help ensure species’ survival. The limbic system is the part of the brain responsible for, among other things, emotional and behavioral responses linked to survival-based behaviors such as sustenance and procreation. Within the limbic system, the nucleus accumbens, the brain’s main “pleasure center” or “reward center,” is a dense collection of cells that are receptive to the neurotransmitter dopamine. Dopamine is excitatory and highly stimulating; it causes humans to feel pleasure. Dr. Greenfield will explain that the Internet is a highly effective dopamine delivery platform. Using the Internet—like drugs, alcohol, sex, food, and gambling—elevates a person’s dopamine levels and can lead to compulsive or addictive use and the behaviors that accompany such compulsion. Heavy Internet users look online again and again in anticipation of further potential dopamine hits. Additionally, Dr. Greenfield will testify about the concept of “synergistic amplification,” applied in the context of Internet use to mean that more potent and stimulating content is more likely to have compulsive or addictive potential. Use of the Internet in and of itself sends dopamine to the brain. That dopamine hit is amplified by content that is more extreme or exciting.

Dr. Greenfield will also discuss the connection between social isolation and compulsive Internet use. People with fewer sources of real-time social stimulation are at greater risk of using the Internet compulsively. He will explain the concept of “broadcast intoxication,” the phenomenon of Internet and social media users experiencing an intoxicating effect—elevated dopamine levels—from posting content on the Internet and receiving social validation. He will also discuss the “maybe factor,” the dynamic of variable reinforcement on the Internet. As with a slot machine, social media users post online without knowing what content will be rewarded or validated.

Respectfully,
